Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin - Microeconomics Research Group

The Microeconomics Research Group in the School of Economics and Business at Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin is looking for postdoctoral research associates to join the group in the fall of 2019. Strong researchers with interests in microeconomics (applied/empirical/experimental/theoretical) are encouraged to apply. The main job description is academic research, with some teaching.

Research areas of the group include game theory & mechanism design, industrial organization, behavioral/experimental economics, labor economics, organization economics and personnel economics. The group is currently looking to hire especially in the area of behavioral/experimental economics but applicants from all named areas are encouraged to apply. For questions please contact Georg Weizsäcker (weizsaecker@hu-berlin.de).

Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin - Finance Group

The Finance Group @ Humboldt is seeking candidates who demonstrated their research potential with an outstanding PhD in Finance or Economics with specializations in the areas of Corporate Finance, Financial Intermediation, or Investment. The Group attaches great importance to publications in internationally renowned journals, commitment to teaching and the acquisition of third-party research funding. The future colleague will be part of the finance group at Humboldt and can freely choose her/his research focus. The future colleague is expected to teach courses on Venture Capital at the bachelor and master level. For further information please contact Prof. Tim Adam at tim.adam@hu-berlin.de.

Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin für Sozialforschung (WZB)

The WZB Research Area 'Markets & Choice' offers a position for a postdoctoral research associate in the summer/fall of 2018 to join the group of behavioral economists at the Berlin Social Science Center. The WZB is a publicly funded research institution within the Leibniz association. The academic research conducted at the WZB in the social sciences is theory-based and problem-oriented. The position at the WZB implies freedom from teaching obligations, strong administrative support for projects, grant proposals and workshop organization, access to the WZB-TU economics lab as well as many opportunities to interact with academic peers. Current research topics of the group include bounded rationality, social preferences, market design, matching theory, status concerns, corruption, and privacy. Researchers with a strong background in behavioral economics or market design and interest in the development of their own projects within the framework of the group are encouraged to apply. For more details about the position, please contact Prof. Dorothea Kübler (dorothea.kuebler@wzb.eu).
